

Friday 14th January 2022

LO: To consolidate our understanding of adverbs of possibility.

Can you write a piece of writing which predicts what schools might be like 50 years from now? There is a list of adverbs below and an example of what your piece of writing may sound like. You can draw an illustration to accompany your ideas too!

Adverbs of possibility certainly - definitely - maybe - possibly - surely - clearly - obviously - perhaps - probably - undoubtedly

Although the next fifty years will clearly see lots of changes in school, obviously there are some things that will not change. Surely teachers will still teach and pupils will still learn. There will probably be more technology in the classroom and perhaps every child will have a tablet for class work.....

Choose an adverb of possibility to start with and off you go!

Use the following questions to help you think about what to write:

How will children in the future get to school?

What lessons will they study?

How many will be in each class?

What will they do at break and lunch times? What will they eat?

What will they do their work on? Tablets, laptops or something else?

Who will teach the children of the future? A person, a robot or even an alien?